

18TH CENTURY ENGLISH BRASS CHANDELIER

An elegant English six-branch brass chandelier. The collared ring detail on the central sphere holds the branches; each s-scroll arm is individually marked and housed in mortised joint flanges extending from the central ring. All central elements are secured on a wrought-iron centre bar locked in place with a wedge-pin. The chandelier was originally intended for candles; but has since been drilled for discrete electrification. This can be arranged if required.

Circa 1750
